The geologic history of a planet is written in its layers. Erosion of the surface reveals several shades of light toned layers, likely sedimentary deposits. The most recent geologic features are the narrow sand dunes snaking across the top of all the rock.

This image is located in the Southern Highlands of Mars to the south of the basin Schiaparelli.